

Residents at Rosewarne Take Control

Possum, Scope and Highgrove Homes recently collaborated to put control back into the lives of the residents of the newly built Rosewarne House in Cornwall. By installing Possum accessible doors, windows, curtains, and nursecall units at the build stage, Scope are “future-proofing” their new residence, meeting all aspects of the CSCI minimum standards, and making sure that someone with any level of physical disability will be able to move in with them in the future.

David Green, Head of Service Transformation at Scope said, "At Scope we are committed to supporting disabled people to have choice and control over their lives. Our services must therefore offer as many ways as possible for individuals to be independent, including access to the right technology. The new facilities at Rosewarne were shaped by the needs and wishes of the disabled people who use them and put them in control of their living environment."
